The antisynthetase syndrome is characterized by the presence of an antisynthetase antibody directed to various cytoplasmic enzymes, including lysine-tRNA synthetase, PL-7, PM-Scl, and Ku proteins. It has been suggested that this condition might represent a specific form of systemic sclerosis and might not be distinguishable from this disease clinically or pathologically. However, this has yet to be confirmed. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and system of filling vessel (s), in which the vessel is filled with a product, and a vessel fill prevention system for preventing the vessel from filling with the product. 2. Description of the Related Art Generally, an automatic washing machine is an apparatus, which is able to wash clothes automatically using a detergent and washing water. The automatic washing machine includes a washing tub filled with washing water, a washing drum rotated to wash clothes by friction, and a driving unit to drive the rotation of the washing tub and the washing drum. FIG. 1 is a cross-sectional diagram showing a conventional vessel fill prevention system. Referring to
