1. Technical Field The present invention relates generally to an improved data processing system and in particular to a method and apparatus for processing information. Still more particularly, the present invention relates to a method, apparatus, and computer instructions for performing a persistency fix for a sequence of data within a data processing system.

2. Description of Related Art In a business environment, many different applications may be used to process information. In some cases, it may be desirable to ensure that information generated from the application is not stored for too long or until it is needed to perform a task or process that is dependent on the information. For example, a database may be required to store financial information such as monthly and annual statements until the information is needed to prepare the statement. As another example, a computer system may be required to persistently store critical data so that the system may continue to run without being shut down. Typically, persistency is implemented by setting a flag that indicates to a storage medium that the data should be saved. When the data is needed, a flag is checked to determine if the flag is set. If the flag is not set, the data is retrieved from the storage medium and stored in memory. If the flag is set, the data is written to the storage medium. If the data is persisted to a storage medium but is not actually stored until needed, then the data is stored as if it is available for later access. However, if the data is not persisted to a storage medium, the data is lost until it is needed. One problem with persistency is that the data is typically written to a storage medium after the flag is set to indicate that the data should be stored. As a result, the storage medium is unavailable for access while the data is stored. For example, if the data is to be retrieved from the storage medium after a 24 hour period, then the data will not be available to perform operations that are dependent on the data during the 24 hour period. Therefore, it would be advantageous to have an improved method, apparatus, and
