Ask HN: Why do Uber/Lyft drivers and delivery people get carded? - bigtunacan I have been wondering this for a while now. I have noticed that both Uber and Lyft drivers get carded and even delivery people have gotten carded for driving someone home. Now, I know they are not usually a law enforcement agency. But do they get carded in real life situations? I am in the Bay Area. ===== PaulHoule Sometime ago a politician said that he would address the issue of Uber drivers getting carded on the ballot in his state. He never did. Maybe because, at the time, he would have had to admit that labor union thugs were supporting him so it would have been a PR disaster. ~~~ bigtunacan I guess I see your point but what if a politician wanted to address the issue but his political advisers told him to just let it go? ----- pwinnski It's probably also a fairly easy way for a taxi driver to work for multiple cabs, just because no one will realize it's them. ----- quickthrower2 They can just issue you a new card in a day or two? ----- shaftway Uber and Lyft have issued licenses for that year, and they're much more expensive than a traditional taxi license. They're not doing the background check to issue the license. They're just doing the necessary paperwork to say "you're allowed to drive for this company in the city for this year". ~~~ bigtunacan That makes sense, but I have yet to hear of someone actually having their license revoked. I am wondering if that is because they are actually submitting their background check results to DMV or not. 2d92ce491b
