Q: How to properly set different connection credentials I have two different databases that I connect to from two different clients. The first is on the internal network, and I have my connection string set in the web.config to use it's login and password. I have a second database that I access from a client in the field. This client's computers do not have any kind of access to our network, so the connection string cannot use the internal login/password. I am at a loss on how to set the connection string for the client's database. Is it possible? A: If you can connect to the database using sql server management studio, simply give the credentials in the connection string. I'm assuming you can access a SQL Server Management Studio on the client's machine? If so, you can just type the credentials into the connection string. If you cannot access sql server manager from the client, you can connect using a third-party tool like, Sybase IQ If you want to do this from within an application, then you can create a connection using the credentials stored in the.config file, and then switch between connections by setting the connection string in the app.config In general though, I would strongly recommend against having sensitive data stored in the web.config file. If you store the credentials in an sql user-table or a Sql Server table, then even if your site is offline, you can still access it. In a recent interview on ABC News, former President Jimmy Carter said that he is making plans to run for president in 2020. He added that he believes he could win if he chooses to run. "I'm not at all interested in the presidency," Carter told ABC News chief anchor George Stephanopoulos. "But I think I could win." Carter emphasized that my eset says that the module update failed. in small letters it says Update authorization error. please check your license. I've already tried clearing the cache and resetting it. Santoro - I have the same problem with other antiviruses, only in a more sophisticated form. I wrote that they block module updates due to a license error, which is not true. They don't block updates, they just can't complete them. And it's not a license error. The mistake, in my opinion, is that they do not allow you to update modules without knowing whether you have a license to update. Santoro - And how does it "block updates" fffad4f19a
