

Thanks for your help A: Just had the same problem, this helped me (it did for a second time): It seems that no sound is working after this, but there is still the system volume. So I tried it again a while later, and it worked. Running Windows 10. I uninstalled all sound and audio devices (except for the mic). Then reinstalled them and enabled everything. By the way, the problem was not in my headphones, because they all worked fine. I have the exact same problem. I'm using a laptop with an NVIDIA GPU and a 2TB hard drive. I tried every single driver released by Realtek (Windows 10 64-bit). Only RTL8723BE-2.0.1-10.0.19.1 works. Here is my audio hardware configuration: Device Manager: Sound Playback Speakers Speakers (Other) Speakers (Other) - Realtek High Definition Audio Speakers (Other) - Integrated Audio Headphones Headphones - Realtek High Definition Audio Software & Hardware Windows Audio Windows Audio (Other) Hardware Devices Realtek High Definition Audio On Windows 10 (64 bit), I installed a fresh copy of Win 10 and I've copied the exact same configuration and drivers from my laptop with problems. The speaker volume slider works but the volume does not change when I use it. I tried to capture with different apps and I get no audio. It seems like a realtek issue. If you're on Windows 10, check the driver that works and try to make a copy of it and install it on your laptop. Q: How to map the reducers from Flux/React states The question is simple, but I couldn't find a similar question. I'm working on a React application and I'm using Flux for my app-state. I'm using immutable.js and now I want to implement some functionalities using reducers but I'm not able to understand how to get the "map" function working. I know that the idea behind the map function is to apply a function to every value in a list, but for me it doesn't work. I'm able to map the state but I don't understand why it doesn't update
