In the past, our Discussion Forums were open to the public and were used to communicate and share scientific ideas and discuss science-related topics. This allowed scientists from around the world to participate in these discussions, and it also allowed the public to get involved in a meaningful way. Unfortunately, the level of discourse in these forums was often unprofessional, and discussions became very contentious. Our goal is to facilitate open and productive scientific discussions in a setting where people can be passionate about their field of research, without being riled up by heated disagreements. These new Research Communities provide the tools for just this kind of interaction. We invite you to take the plunge and create an account.
