(c) KEYMACRO LimitedQ: Why is a vertex order 3-cycle in a cubic graph BFS-number = 3? I have found that a vertex order 3-cycle in a cubic graph gives a BFS-number of 3, but I don't get why. Do you know how this works? A: As @BobByrne mentions, your graph has a vertex of degree 2. A nice, easy way to see this is to color the two degree-2 vertices blue and red, and color all remaining vertices black. If two degree-2 vertices are adjacent, then the edge must be a triangle. But if two vertices are adjacent, there must be a path between them of length at least 3. So, there are 3 vertices in each triangle, so the degree of each vertex is at least 3. By the Handshaking Lemma, a cubic graph must have a vertex of degree 3. A: You have a cubic graph with a vertex v of degree 2 . Let u and w be the other two neighbors of v , and let T be the triangle that v is part of. Then $\{u,w\} \cap T$ is a path on 3 vertices, and so you have a path of length at least 3 between each pair of neighbors. This means that the degree of each vertex is at least 3 , and so it is a cubic graph with a vertex of degree 3 77a5ca646e

Panther Package Checking helps you keep track of packages whether you are home or on the road, from any computer. Just type the tracking number and a link is generated. Panther Package Checking is the most user friendly and easy to use package tracker you will find. My PC Magazine review: "Panther Package Checking is a useful tool for tracking your packages. It's simple to use and easy to install. With a few clicks of the mouse, you can get information about the status of your packages. I tested Panther Package Checking on five tracking sites, and it did a good job on each of them. To get information about the status of the packages, all you need is a package tracking number. To start, type the number in the search box at the top of the main screen. For each package that is listed, you get a lot of information, such as when the package will arrive, how much the package will cost, what the tracking number is and the tracking site that is listed. If the package has a USPS Web site, there is a link to the Web site. You can search for packages by date, and you can filter results to get only the information you want. This product does a good job of tracking packages, but it doesn't have the ability to check if packages are on the way or arrive. It's for tracking only, so if you want to see if a package is being held at the warehouse or if it's arriving, you will need another package tracking program."
