Mads Langer Olsen joined City on a season-long loan from Rosenborg in the summer, with a view to signing him permanently at the end of the campaign. Langer Olsen has scored eight goals in 24 appearances this term, and Guardiola has described him as "a very important player" in the squad. After speaking to the club's Danish forward, he said: "He is a player with huge quality, but he is not a striker that doesn't play one-touch, runs a lot and scores goals. He is a complete player. "The season has been good for him. It's important for the club because he's been here and

Active Directory Rights Management Service Client [Win/Mac]

Active Directory Rights Management Service (AD RMS) is a service that is installed on every Microsoft® Windows Server® 2003 based Domain Controller and used to control access to information stored in AD. It can be configured to support different kinds of rights such as access to information, creation of objects and document control. Before a user can access information, the user must be authenticated by the RMS service, using a user principal provided by Active Directory. This client is a thin client that is not a full blown application but only a set of API methods which can be used to retrieve information from a server. This is a thin client application, and does not require installation on client machines, nor does it require administrative privileges. It is the easiest client for a user who is not a network administrator to install. This makes it perfect for software vendors to enable their users to authenticate to RMS protected content. Note: The client uses and requires RMS certificates to work. This client is not dependent on or linked to any specific set of features, functionality, or runtime requirements. Active Directory Rights Management Service Client support for the following platforms: Microsoft® Windows® Operating Systems Currently only Windows Server 2003 or later are supported. MIDL Language Pack 2.0 or later: Interop assemblies: Microsoft.DirectoryServices.Interop.dll Windows Base Class for AD Interop (BCAD) Windows Server Base Class for AD Interop (WSAD) Tight integration with the RMS service means that the Active Directory Rights Management Service Client does not expose any security vulnerabilities. Note: When using MIDL Language Pack 2.0 or later, the server and client cannot communicate with each other unless it is configured to do so in the Network and Sharing Center. Using the Interop assemblies for Windows Server Base Class for AD Interop (WSAD) and Windows Server Base Class for AD Interop (BCAD) is not supported. Microsoft.DirectoryServices.Interop.dll: Microsoft.DirectoryServices.Interop is the essential set of MIDL language pack assemblies. To use the following client functionality, the Microsoft.DirectoryServices.Interop assembly is required. The following are the required properties on the RMSClientParameters object. Note: Values for all these properties should be passed in the constructor. TokenHandle Property:
