KeyMacro is a handy and easy-to-use replacement for the standard Windows keyboard hotkeys. With KeyMacro you have control over your mouse and keyboard – no matter if you use a laptop or a desktop computer. All of the most commonly used hotkeys are supported, as well as text and applications shortcut keys. KeyMacro works by registering hotkeys on the keyboard's USB and PS/2 connectors. Hotkeys can be assigned to any key, key combination or button, and all of your settings are saved and accessible from the program's interface. You can define the hotkey's behavior, assign it to a new shortcut key, modify the hotkey's key, and/or add a delay. KeyMacro also allows you to run macros from the keyboard. Macros are just like hotkeys, but can consist of a series of text or application keystrokes. The macros can be scheduled to run at a certain time, day, week, month, or even on a specific date. You can also lock macros to prevent others from modifying or running them. In addition to macros, KeyMacro also includes a fully-featured macro recorder. This useful tool records every key you type, along with a timestamp of when it was typed. You can also save these macros for later use. The Macro Recorder is also available as an add-on. Many people keep hearing about the constant buzzing sound that most home wireless routers emit. While the annoyance isn't anything major, it is definitely there. Most people would agree that it is annoying, and some would even say it is disruptive. However, for some it is like background music. We have taken one of the most popular routers from the last few years, namely the TP-Link Archer C5 AC1900 and gone in and configured it with a wireless dongle. We took it to our hotel where there was no WLAN signal and took it to the park where the entire area was covered by WiFi. We took it on a walk and it connected to several devices, both smartphones and wireless printers, all while getting its batteries recharged. We even took it to the beach and took it outside on a windy day and it still connected to the devices around it. This really is the perfect router.
