Create memes with just a few mouse clicks, directly from the browser Chrome extension easily transforms any picture from the Internet into a meme Enjoy the best memes from around the world in all sizes and resolutions Simply right-click any loaded picture, and select the "Memefy This Image" option Enjoy the best memes from around the world in all sizes and resolutions In the end, Memefy This is definitely one of the most convenient ways to make the Internet a bit more fun for you. When was the last time you checked your Facebook messages? Most likely, it was at least a day ago, if not a week. In that intervening time, you've probably seen countless messages from friends and family that you need to respond to. But do you have time? If you have absolutely no time — say, you're busy downloading a massive torrent or turning a page in a book — you can use yet another one of Facebook's handy tricks. On Facebook, you can create a "Batch" message and send it out at a specific time. This batch, when sent out, will deliver messages to the appropriate people at a preset time. We're talking about a feature that Facebook has been touting for a while, but the option to turn it on was just found in an obscure and rarely used menu. Here's how to activate it: On your Facebook page, click the "More" icon in the top right corner. Then, from the menu that appears, you should find "Batch Settings." Tap the "Batch Settings" option to turn it on. Facebook Messenger will begin to remind you when you need to begin batching your messages. Once you've clicked "OK" to that pop-up message, your new updates will begin to arrive automatically, at a specific time, at a time you set. Batch messages also can be paused and resumed. Just click the "Pause" button when you want to pause the sending of messages. And the "Resume" button when you want to resume them. To pause the message batch, click the "Pause" button. When you want to resume, click the "Resume" button. When your messages arrive they should be saved in a folder that has the date you set for them. Just keep in mind you'll need your Facebook password to access the date and time for these messages. Facebook currently doesn't offer a "manage" menu for batch messages. However,
