Capture mouse, keyboard, etc. events in Phaser game I am new to Phaser game framework and would like to have a simulation where a player can move a ship around, but also be able to move about using keyboard and/or mouse input. I know how to capture keyboard and/or mouse input: var config = { keyboard: true, pointer: true };

$(document).keydown(function (event) { // Handle Keyboard Events }); $(document).keyup(function (event) { // Handle Keyboard Events }); $(document).mousedown(function (event) { // Handle Mouse Events });
```

$(document).mousemove(function (event) { // Handle Mouse Events });

However, I want to have a simulation where a player with their spaceship can move about the galaxy, and the user can also move the ship around using their keyboard and mouse. Is there a way to do this in Phaser? A: You just add a keyboard and mouse component to an object (a spaceship, for example), and then call the game.add.keyboard(ship, config) and game.add.mouse(ship, config) methods on the ship you want to make movable. The configuration options are as you've already stated: keyboard: true, pointer: true Of course, you need to check first if the keyboard or mouse events have been fired, and then respond accordingly to them. Severe flexion contracture of the elbow in children. Flexion contractures of the elbow in children are rare. They are usually associated with some other deformity that is static, such as a Charcot elbow. These children usually have disuse weakness or injury to the forearm muscle groups. However, they can also be totally passive. These contractures are of several types, including synovial, fibrositic, congenital, and post-traumatic. The authors review the current theories, presenting some of their own views of the pathogenesis of these contractures
