Advantages of a portable app On the bright side of things, the application is good to go from the moment download is done, which means there's no setup involved. As such, it's pretty convenient to carry it on a USB flash drive in case you want or need to perform this cleaning operation on other computers without putting them at risk because registry entries are not modified in the process. The visual design is minimalistic, consisting of a compact main window which holds all elements. Since temp files can end up in a variety of locations, the application makes it possible to specify where to look for temp files with little effort. Clean fixed or removable drives One sure option to free up some space fast is to have the local hard disk scanned and cleaned. It's advisable to cease all other activities when doing so to avoid creating more temporary files during the scan process, and to make sure files are properly identified. The scan process depends on the complexity and size of the location you target. There's a progress slider to let you know how the process is going. By the end of it a new window shows up with a list of all detected files, including a value field for the total amount. Selected items are removed at the press of a button. A few last words Taking everything into account, Gazz Temp Cleaner is sure to help you free up some space by removing unnecessary temp files resulting from unfinished tasks or other processes. It can be used on the go, while the location selection option makes sure you remove all, or just files you're sure you want to Press a key and a sequence is played. You can play all the keys on the keyboard at once, or only some, or even several keys at the same time. The keys can be assigned on the fly and then be easily triggered using the button, hotkey, or even gamepad. You can of course use any kind of hardware input source: Joystick, USB Gamepad, or Keyboard. Now it's really simple! All you need is to bind one of the hotkeys to a function and the rest of the keys will be assigned automatically, and you can go on doing something else while they are triggered and played. The built-in sequencer is great, but there's also an online sequencer, so your sequences are still remembered even if you're not online. Setting up the system is really easy. You just need to use the attached tutorials to set up all the keys you want to use. It's like the simplest gamepad control system ever made, and you can use the same hotkey for a lot of different keys. The gamepad is connected to your computer via USB and it works on all computers made since Windows 2000. Also compatible with all modern versions of Windows, Linux, and Mac OS X. On Linux, the gamepad is compatible with xbindkeys, so you can use it directly with xbindkeys. See the attached screenshots for more information. Uses Gamepad for input: I included a quick tutorial to help you configure the gamepad easily. You just need to click the button and set up the gamepad like a keyboard. Select a key and hit the button to bind it. You can assign as many keys as you want. And of course, you can also press one key and a sequence is played. Configure gamepad and hotkeys: The tutorial also includes a section about the gamepad configuration. Here you can set up all the keys you want to use. Click the button to assign a key to a specific function. Press another button to bind the last selected function to the key. Here you can assign as many keys as you want to a specific function. Play your sequence, assign a key to a function, and press another button to bind the last selected function to the key. Keyboard shortcuts: I already released a quick tutorial on the built-in keyboard shortcuts. Here you can configure the keys you want to use. The hotkeys 1d6a3396d6
