It's part of a continuous action of a situation that is taking place; it's always happening. As for the character of people in the incident, I've seen a lot. I've seen so many that we've got to look at them and think about how they develop, how they react, how they deal with the stress that they're under, how they respond to it, how do they become more competitive, how do they react to it in other ways, how they deal with the others around them. There's so many different aspects to that. There's so many different types of people that it's really important that you learn how to interact with people and understand how they respond and how they react and you have to be able to ask the right questions, you have to know when to ask the right questions and you have to understand their response, because you're dealing with them. That's the only way you're going to be able to do that job. That's all that I can tell you. Q: What effect does having an authentic and believable character in the action have? A: It's always important, and that's what a great actor does. When you play a part, you always have to believe that you're doing it and that it is the real thing. At the same time, you have to understand your character, understand the character that you're playing. You have to create a picture of the character that you're playing. You have to understand what the character is going through; you have to
