others the magistrate is merely performing a ministerial role. This is, of course, an oversimplification, but it will suffice to say that in many instances the magistrate's powers are largely discretionary. [2] We note that the appellant has made other arguments which will be addressed in due course. [3] The offer of settlement date was less than three weeks after the appellant filed the motion for extension of time. We are satisfied that this was done in good faith, and that it was the appellant's intention to pursue the claim. Accordingly, we cannot say that the magistrate erred when he denied the motion for extension. [4]

W.Va.Code § 55-7B-6(b) reads in relevant part: (b) After a hearing to determine the reasonableness of the offer of settlement, whether conducted by the judge or by a magistrate, the court may enter an order reducing the amount of the offer of settlement to an amount within the range of the liability limits specified in the first offer of settlement submitted in writing by the claimant or by the plaintiff at the beginning of the action, whichever is greater, and extending the time for further negotiations for an additional period of sixty days. This order shall not be approved until the offer of settlement is reurged by the claimant or the plaintiff, in writing, to the court within the sixty-day period. The aggregate amount of the offer may not exceed the liability limits specified in the first offer of settlement submitted in writing by the claimant or by the plaintiff at the beginning of the action, whichever is greater. [5] In Firestone v. Simmons, supra, this Court noted that W.Va.R.Civ.P. 41(a)(2) "allows a motion to dismiss a plaintiff's claim prior to trial if it is based on a compromise." 155
