Q: How to style multiple td's using CSS? I'm trying to remove the gray border that surrounds an asp:ContentPlaceholder. The borders are appearing for two reason. When the first column in the asp:ContentPlaceholder appears, it uses a grid. The grid has a border around it which is what gives the border around each of the columns. But that border is too wide and I'd rather get rid of it. I've tried using the following CSS: .aspnetContentPlaceholder { border:none!important; } .aspnetContentPlaceholder table { border:none!important; } But it doesn't seem to work. How can I go about this? A: After playing around with this on a whim I figured out that after a table is generated from a grid, it has this CSS: .ASPContentGridTemplate { border: 0; border-collapse: collapse; } .ASPContentGrid-Border { border: 1px solid #cccccc; } A single line for the border is enough. So if you remove that, it will just have the shadow if there is one. No worries. Q: Windows driver development Q&A I am looking for good questions and answers on developing drivers for Windows 7 and later operating systems. A lot of good information is being shared on this community. If a question already exists, I would be happy to cite it as a solution. I appreciate all the research that goes into the information shared on these sites and Q&A. Thanks! A: John's article linked above is probably the best introduction to Windows Drivers that I have seen. EDIT: A few other articles that I found useful were: Documentation Changes for Windows 8 Devices Drivers Develop
