This program is an auto learning program. You can type to an input box and the program will be able to figure out how you spell by recording how you type. The program will not learn anything from spelling past the dictionary words but can learn from inputting words you may not have used. You can create as many dictionaries as you like, using this program and the file sharing support in Windows. This program is designed to help children with dyslexia. The program will never teach you to type at a pace higher than your typing speed. It is not recommended for use by non-reading disabled children. Windows XP/Vista/7/8/8.1/10, Free Download--- abstract: The lack of geometrical information for voxel-based models in medical imaging is a critical problem in Computer-Assisted Surgery. The recent development of various techniques for enhancing the visualization of volumetric data is, however, only a partial solution, and needs to be complemented with more explicit access to geometric information. Among the recent developments in this field, the mathematical theory of *Finite Element Methods* (FEM) has been applied to some fields of Computer-Assisted Surgery. The finite element method generates virtual elements in the geometrical domain, which are assembled into a single element mesh in the physical domain. The combination of FEM with CAD techniques for finite element mesh generation leads to significant improvements of geometric quality in the virtual models. Nevertheless, the ability to directly manipulate the physical structure generated by FEM on a CT or MRI scanner remains a difficult task, as it is difficult to relate finite element mesh elements to physical objects. FEM modeling of CT and MRI scans is, however, feasible with the help of software tools and a mathematical transformation from the physical to the virtual space. The advantages and drawbacks of different FEM modeling techniques are evaluated and compared. The future trends and open issues in this area are finally addressed.' author: - | Chiara Dell'Oro, Stefan Schmidt, Jörg von Arx, Dirk Reimar, Claus Behnke, Raimund Dirks and Gunter Stölzle\ $mathsf{\quad 1.
