I've tried to get an android app to run the installshield project included with its documentation. I have both the app and installshield in eclipse. I followed the tutorials to the letter, but the end result is that the installer does not install, even though the.exe files exist in the bin folder. I've been told by other users that there is a difference between windows application and an android installer. According to them Windows 7 needs a manifest of.exe, while Android needs it of.apk. Is there some tutorial or other piece of information that describes how to make a windows installer from within Android? A: I believe you need to be more specific about what you mean by an 'android installer'. For Windows MSI you can create an MSI file from a VS2010 project, and then "Package and deploy the MSI package". You can, of course, convert the MSI project to an Android project, but there is nothing built-in to Android (as far as I know) to help you with this. The Key Elements That Make michaelpinto This is a rather broad topic and I don't read

Inbound so I'm just throwing in my two cents: When I think about it, there are three key elements to good design:
1\. Readability -- the most important thing but not the only important thing 2\. Usability -- less important but sometimes essential 3\.

ADMINISTRATION.LEQ3000.SPAN I have problems installing Wilcom Embroidery Studio E2 in Windows 7. Here's the problem: I installed it, everything was okay. So I tried to install it again without CD, and it failed with the following message: Unable to verify Microsoft signature I uninstalled and again, just with CD, tried to install it again. It didn't change, failed with the same message. I read something about a MS signature, but can't figure what the problem might be. Tried unchecking something in the software's installer, like checking other dlls that might interfere. The only thing that I noticed that was weird was that the installation log file was not in %temp% after installation, but before uninstalling. Just to make sure that the program was downloaded properly and that it's not corrupted, I sent the installer file to my email (I don't have access to the internet during installation) and it came back to me with the following file size: 198.62 MB. That's the expected size. Any idea about what might be causing this problem? A: So after searching a bit more, I found some information about an error message that people get: "Unable to verify Microsoft signature" The problem is that there is already a program installed called "Microsoft Windows Compatibility Assistant for Windows 7". After uninstalling it, you should be able to install Wilcom Embroidery Studio E2 normally. Q: How to classify over multiple dates in R I want to classify the duplicate ID's based on using difftime to define two ID's as duplicates if they have similar number of duplicate dates between say two columns and also among multiple columns Here is a sample of the data I am using ID 570a42141b
