Q: the relationship between a coefficient and rdf:type and rdf:ID What is the relationship of a vocabulary such as rdf:type to a class in an ontology? For example, does owl:Thing have a rdf:type, or is it a subclass of owl:Restriction? Similarly, what is the relationship of rdf:ID to a vocabulary such as rdf:type? There seems to be a relationship between rdf:type and rdf:ID: I have found instances of rdf:ID being used to refer to rdf:type values, but I have also found instances where rdf:type is used to refer to rdf:ID's. Thanks! A: Yes, there is an rdf:type property that is specific to the class owl:Thing in the Ontology that is OWLFDL (Similarly, there is an rdf:ID property for owl:Thing that could be rdf:subsetOf, which is the formal definition of "is-a" relationship. If you look at the ontology of Protégé, there are rdf:type and rdf:ID properties for all the predefined OWL2 classes there. You can see this in the dump files. -rw-r--r-- 1 user users 266 Mar 28 15:26 ontology.owl -rw-r--r-- 1 user users 18880 Mar 28 15:26 rdfs.rdf -rw-r-- a69d392a70

The price of an ounce of gold (i.e., 1 troy ounce, about 28.35 grams) of pure gold is expressed in terms of the U.S. dollar ($). It is a major investment, and is very popular among collectors, investors and governments. The price of gold has fluctuated over the years, but it has remained relatively stable since the Second World War. It is the second most-traded material in the world after crude oil, and it is used to make most of the electronics we use on a daily basis. Traditionally, people would use gold coins as currency, but most countries have switched to the U.S. dollar. The gold price is denoted by the quotation "$/oz", although it can also be expressed as "£/oz", "€/oz", or "¥/oz". There are multiple ways to obtain gold, including from family members, bartering, mining, investing, and selling. Gold has also been used in jewelry for millennia, and it can be found in historic art and buildings. Its primary use today is a jewelry, but it is also used in dentistry, wire-drawing and as a standard for weights and measurements. Gold and silver can also be found in coins, which are produced by the central government, commodity exchanges, private mints and private companies. Some governments such as the U.S. Mint and Royal Canadian Mint have their own exchange-traded commodities, and can be traded like stocks on public exchanges. Gold Value of Different Metals In U.S. dollars, the price of gold is usually quoted per troy ounce. However, you can also get the price per carat for diamonds, or even per gram. Silver in U.S. dollars is quoted per troy ounce, or weight in metric tons. These are all the major ways to obtain gold: Gold Exchange Trade Coins (in U.S. dollars) Gold Bar Mining (in U.S. dollars) Private Ownership Other people, including private individuals and family members, own some gold. The price of gold generally increases as demand rises, so there are typically sellers who are willing to sell at a discount for these individuals.
