Click to download:Opiates inhibit the growth of some transplantable human tumors in SCID mice. We investigated the antitumor effect of different opiates on four transplantable human tumor cells (namely, colon adenocarcinoma, breast carcinoma, melanoma, and glioblastoma multiforme) and two cell lines established from these tumors (namely, colon adenocarcinoma HCT 116 and breast carcinoma MCF-7). The results obtained with two methods of tumor cell inoculation were practically the same. Thus, groups of SCID mice were injected with 2×10^5 tumor cells i.p., i.v., or i.d. (intradermally). Mice were treated i.p. every 5th day with 10 mg/kg of morphine, 10 mg/kg of naloxone, 0.5 mg/kg of clonidine, or 0.1 mg/kg of fentanyl. Control mice received physiological serum. At the end of the treatment, the mice were killed and the number of macroscopically detectable tumors in each group of mice was recorded. A comparable number of tumors was found in all groups. However, at the end of the treatment, growth of the tumors in mice treated with naloxone or clonidine was slower than that of the tumors in controls. Thus, naloxone and clonidine have antitumor activity. Fentanyl was found to increase the number of tumors. Morphine was without significant effect on the growth of the tumors. Our study shows that opiates have antitumor activity and at the same time inhibit mouse growth in terms of cell number. ← 3e33713323
