In fact, when I first looked at Accessible for blinds 3.30 or later, I wanted to ask whether the software actually works with my system. However, I have found a very interesting application that might prove to be very useful for many people who are blind and want to use their computers. It's an application that will help you play audio files, listing the currently selected files or folders with the provided audio engine. Moreover, it will perform MP3 / WAV file conversion and it will allow you to turn any text to speech audio file into MP3. This is what makes Accessible for blinds 3.30 or later so special. From the look of it, the application does not appear to be sophisticated and it certainly does not have a fancy interface. Nevertheless, the utility comes with many useful features that will make it one of the better choices for users who exhibit eyesight deficiencies. Using its keyboard, you will be able to enter and navigate through the directory tree, viewing the currently selected files or folders and those you have used before. You can also pause on any items and when pausing on the file or folder, the application will read aloud the name of the selected content. Like all Windows applications, you will also be able to minimize, maximize or exit the application. The application also comes with different colors for the selected items, background and file details pane and this could be totally irrelevant. On our tests, the application didn't support file format conversion and the utility will not open any Windows Media Player or Windows Media Player Enhanced windows. For users who might want to use this application, Accessible for blinds 3.30 or later is probably an interesting solution, especially since it allows people to hear the currently selected files or folders.
