Myoepithelial cells contribute to the glycosylation of breast epithelium: a case for a tumor-promoting role for glycoconjugates in breast cancer. The myoepithelial cells of the mammary gland secrete the glycoprotein AMBP which functions as a pregnancy factor. We hypothesized that AMBP may be responsible for the high carbohydrate content of the breast epithelium and proposed that the hypoglycosylation of the breast epithelium is a result of loss of AMBP expression in breast cancer. Further, it has been shown that the carbohydrate content of myoepithelial cell-conditioned medium increases when myoepithelial cells are co-cultured with breast cancer cells. Since glycan-processing enzymes expressed by glycoprotein glycosyltransferases use dolichyl-P-P-P-dolichyl phosphate (Dol-P-P-P-Dol, Dol-P) as a donor substrate, we asked whether Dol-P-P-P-Dol was expressed in the human mammary gland and whether Dol-P-P-P-Dol expression was altered in breast cancer. Dol-P-P-P-Dol was expressed in both normal and malignant breast tissue, showing Dol-P-P-P-Dol expression in 17-67% of the breast epithelial cells with this expression increasing with increasing lactation stage. The enzyme Dol-P-P-P-Dol was detected in milk samples, the milk being rich in carbohydrates. Dol-P-P-P-Dol expression was significantly decreased in both primary breast carcinomas and in metastases, as compared with the normal breast tissue from the same patients, suggesting a change in expression in breast cancer. In summary, the normal and malignant breast epithelium produce Dol-P-P-P-Dol, suggesting that dolichyl phosphate is an important donor substrate in this tissue. Further, we show that the expression of Dol-P-P-P-Dol in myoepithelial cells increases when the myoepithelial cells are co-cultured with breast cancer cells. We conclude that the normal and malignant breast epithelium contain Dol-P-P-P-Dol and that this enzyme is important for the glycosylation of the mammary epithelium.ate(Frame(time, 0, True, False),
