To explore the experiences of pregnant women regarding work during pregnancy. This is a descriptive study in which 22 women from a public maternity clinic in a city in the Southeast region of Brazil were interviewed. The interviews were transcribed and analysed based on the thematic content analysis. Participants consider pregnancy an important stage in their lives because it is a period during which they expect to learn more about themselves, have more time to take care of themselves and of their unborn child and show themselves to the world. Work was not mentioned as an obstacle to this process. Participants consider working during pregnancy to be socially very important; they stated that they have more options, are more valued at work and achieve more autonomy. However, they were also concerned about changes in work due to their pregnancy. Participants consider the current Brazilian legislation and regulations on work during pregnancy to be deficient, since they think that they are applied in an inadequate and unpredictable manner. It is possible to assume that pregnant women's experiences with work during pregnancy need to be understood in a labor market context.Q: What are the appropriate water pressure levels for a sewer to be considered safe? Background I am installing a bathroom inside an existing structure. The structure does not have any proper drainage, as the house is a converted garage. We are also having issues with sewer water back up because of the lack of proper drainage. The working theory is that if we are using our toilets and washing machines correctly, we should be able to control the flow of water coming out of the drains and carry it away from the building. As a simple test I was thinking to drop a bucket under one of the drains to check if the water is the correct level (about 3 feet below the floor level). Question So, if the water is coming up to 3 feet below the floor, then what are the appropriate water pressure levels in the pipes? Is it adequate to put 1 gallon per minute? 2? 3?
