Drag and drop works just like the old days, there is no 4+ buttons layout, no menus, no commands, no code, no nothing. Just a long list of files or folders and drag them around or click on them to open them. Even if you started with a file it will add the rest and split it as you add files. ----- Freddy is a keyboard interface. It works like the DOS Navigator or SCO editor. The mode to choose is located in the menu bar, as it was in the Navigator. New features are rapidly added to Freddy. Things to know before using Freddy: - Freddy cannot be run on a 386 or later processor (only on 80386 and above). - Freddy on a 80386 or later processor supports up to 32 KiB of memory. - If you do not know how to use a program like the Navigator, try Freddy first, because it is VERY simple to use. How to Use Freddy:

----- First of all, Freddy is a command line program. There will not be any menu buttons or anything. You start it up by typing "freddy" from the command prompt, or by typing it from the Start Menu. If Freddy is started from the start menu, it will start in the background. After you are done, you can stop the program by typing the command "p" (short for pause). Just type it from the command prompt and hit return. If Freddy is started from the command prompt, the command "run" will run it in the foreground. It will start you off in the mode you selected at the start. If you want to edit text, select the desired mode and type "freddy -m edit" and "freddy -m exit" (is the name that is displayed when you are in the desired mode). In this mode, you can edit text with the keyboard. The keyboard keycodes are: Up: (arrow up) Down: (arrow down) Left: (arrow left) Right: (arrow right) Enter: (Enter) Backspace: (Backspace)

Delete: (Backspace) Tab: (Tab)
Pause: (Pause) Spacebar: (Spacebar) You can use the Keyboard keys as usual (Ex.
Spacebar moves the cursor) The next mode to try is the menu mode. The menu mode is very easy to use. It is similar to the Navigator's menu. You can
