For more information on this topic, must be replaced by a class that is more predictable in its behaviour. The struggle is that under the Semester system, the students are exposed to the theory of a class early in the course. The teacher has essentially given the students an agenda for the course, based in a known set of concepts, and the students are expected to know how to solve problems within that environment. The professor doesn't prepare the course, they merely provide a list of topics. Under the new requirements, the students are expected to learn about a large range of concepts at the end of the term, then are expected to apply that knowledge in a new environment. This has always been part of the problem of teaching Classical Greek. If the student is given a very basic introduction to texts, then the student has no idea how to contextualise the texts within their historical culture. They don't understand how to link the historical culture to the current one. The old texts have to be taught from a
