witnessed Thane crash A lifelong East Harlem resident described how the driver of the car that slammed into him on Thane Avenue was seen "looking right at me, I don't know how he did it, it was like he tried to avoid me," the boy told jurors during closing arguments in the trial of Aaron Edwards. He was 14 years old at the time. "I thought it was going to happen to me," the boy said, fighting back tears. He was one of five children living with his mother in a fifth-floor walk-up apartment building at 167 Thane Avenue, a block from the night of the July 6 crash that killed 34-year-old Lilliana Moreno, a grandmother who had been walking home from a Domino's Pizza. The boy and other children in the building were stuck with a carload of teenagers visiting their friend who lived in the building. Moreno was several blocks away when she died, in a different neighborhood. Edwards, 21, a college student who lived in the same building as the boy, was sentenced to 18 years in state prison in February for second-degree murder. He was convicted by a jury of third-degree murder, the top charge for a person who wasn't charged with felony murder, and is appealing the verdict. He also stands accused of manslaughter, felony assault and unlawful imprisonment. Jurors heard five days of testimony from the boy and two other witnesses, including an officer who witnessed the crash. The boy said he saw Edwards' car come directly at him. He said it was raining that night and the hood of the car was up. "I saw the headlights," he told jurors. "I was just looking right at him and I saw him look at me and then he did it." Edwards took the stand in his own defense and denied intentionally killing Moreno, claiming he was asleep at the wheel when the car careened onto the sidewalk. His lawyer, Ken Feldner, told jurors that it was "outrageous" to take the stand and say that the victim ran out in front of the car and threw herself in front of it.
