Alfred Krupp: Court Martial, Part II (As I Saw It). Alfred Krupp (26 December 1887 - 19 May 1944) was German industrialist and munitions baron. He was the son of Alfred Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach. He was the most powerful employer in Germany, and chief executive of the Krupp corporation, the largest producer of war munitions for the German Army during World War II. After his father's death in 1929, Alfred Krupp became head of the Krupp corporation. Short history of Alfred Krupp - [ar] In 1914, on the occasion of his father's funeral, Alfred Krupp was made a member of the Reichstag and became a wealthy man, being the tenth richest man in Germany in accordance with the 1914 stock market exchange value of Krupps shares. In January 1915 the family left the United States, and in July moved into its house, Friedrichsruh, on Lake Connewitz. The family split into the three branches: while Alfred and his brother Herbert Krupp continued to live at Friedrichsruh, their sisters Elisabeth Krupp and Maria Krupp went to Spain and spent the war years there. In 1916, Alfred and his sister Elisabeth acquired Neuhardenberg Castle, where there were six or eight still-occupied bedrooms. By the fall of 1922, after the death of Alfred Krupp, the family was again reunited and took over their father's former house in Essen. Here they remained, except for Alfred Jr., who went to England as naval attaché. Through the 1930s, Alfred Krupp was known as "America's Guv'nor", as the United States had (in addition to John D. Rockefeller) the biggest munitions producer of all world powers. In 1939, when he returned from an open-air mission to America in 1938, Krupp was considered by American military planners to be the only person who could provide the quickest end to the war. During World War II, he often stated, "The war, as far as Germany is concerned, is won." Much of his family supported Adolf Hitler, but he did not, as Hitler had decided to concentrate on military production and let him make munitions on the cheap; Krupp instead preferred that the Germans use their lucrative factories to produce munitions for the Allies. At the beginning of World War II he stated that he would never sell his company to the
