Note: Although you can use Photoshop to create and edit jpegs, the best format to save images in is the highly popular JPEG format. The features available in Photoshop CS6 are similar to those in earlier versions. In the following list, we cover the significant new features for this release in Photoshop:

* New Color Management System: This is a significant improvement over the old system and is one of the biggest changes in Photoshop CS6. It incorporates ICC color management, which gives you a better preview of the color results of processing images. You can also fine-tune brightness and contrast for color images. This system is default for all your images and will likely be the standard way to work with colors for years to come. In addition to the main features and the new color management system, Photoshop CS6 also has a number of smaller enhancements that make the program more efficient and easier to work with. * No menus! The menus have been hidden in Photoshop CS6, making it easier to use for anyone who's become used to the menus in earlier versions. * New tools: Photoshop CS6 continues to add new tools that make it easier to work with and control various image-editing tasks. You get a better crop tool that works with the content of the image as well as a more efficient fill tool, zoom brush, and improved spot healing tool. * Support for Camera Raw: With the addition of camera raw support (see Chapter 7), users can capture images in a standard way that makes editing and management much easier than in previous versions. The Camera Raw interface has also been improved. * Live-preview editing: This is a new feature in Photoshop CS6 that allows you to preview your edits on the layers of an image in real time. With the press of the space bar, the changes happen immediately. It's a great way to view your effects and tweak your image without having to wait for the default Photoshop preview. * Live Filters: This is an updated version of the popular Lightroom filters that allow you to see the effect your changes are having on your image before saving it. It enables you to add color adjustments, grayscale adjustments, and black-and-white adjustments, as well as resize, sharpen, blur, and smooth the image.

Image caption Paul Joseph Watson Radio presenter Paul Joseph Watson has had a month suspended from Twitter. The LBC presenter - real name Paul Joseph Watson - was briefly suspended from the social media site earlier this year after retweeting a picture with the words "I'm off to kill all the Jews". The picture showed a man pointing a gun at the camera. Twitter has confirmed that Mr Watson's account has been suspended again, telling him in an email: "We have reason to believe your account may have been compromised." Mr Watson later retweeted a picture from the US right-wing group the Proud Boys. In a statement, a Twitter spokesperson told the BBC:

"We take allegations of this nature very seriously. We work aggressively to protect our users from abuse and violations of the Twitter Rules, but because this happens on a rapid scale, it can be challenging to accurately identify bad faith actors." In a statement, Mr Watson said: "The suspension of my account last month was designed to intimidate, silence and shut down my online presence and it failed. "When I woke up this morning, I found my account had been reinstated, meaning it's back to being one of the most powerful platforms in the modern world." Despite suspending Mr Watson, Twitter says it is engaging with the presenter to "better understand the context in which the tweet was published", before deciding whether to lift the ban again. More recently, Mr Watson gained attention on the platform after using Twitter to call rape allegations against film producer Harvey Weinstein "nonsense". A Twitter account owned by Mr Watson shared a link to a blog post by Weinstein Co executive Pamela Hannan, who said men accused of sexual assault in the film industry face a "double standard" and that Hollywood has become "pro-rape culture". Mr Watson then replied to Ms Hannan saying: "Hilarious, I'm #ProudOfHarvey #proudofpamelahannan." Mr Watson then told the BBC: "I don't understand how [Twitter] can justify that.

"One can interpret my tweet and my follow-up response as harmful and it clearly made an impact on her, but I'm very much a provocateur - it's almost like they're pro-harassment. "I have been very offended by many of the things Twitter and other online platforms are saying about me, so I was giving them back their own medicine."
