Why Should I Learn Photoshop? Why is Photoshop such a hit with photographers and graphic designers? The reason is that it gives you access to a high-end feature set that is normally only available to professional photographers. When combined with a deep knowledge of graphic design and web design, Photoshop makes for a powerful and versatile tool. The 'Photoshop' logo is iconic. Credit: Alexey Nesterov

Advanced features If you're a creative entrepreneur, Photoshop is a serious business. You need to know how to use it, but also how to wield it. You might need to know a lot of specialized features, such as how to create social media graphics using special effects, or how to import older layered Photoshop files to update them to the latest standard. You need to know how to use the powerful adjustment layers and filters, which can be used to design from scratch or modify your work using existing images.

Intermediate features If you already have some experience editing images, you'll need to learn how to use Photoshop in a more realistic setting than online applications. You might need to edit a sequence of images, import them into Photoshop, scale, rotate and position them in preparation for printing and/or digital online publishing. You might need to also edit those images in-camera to correct them for color balance or exposure. Some photographers have a natural feel for editing images because they edit photographs, typically between film and digital. This isn't true of all photographers, but these are the skills that will set you apart from the competition.

Professional skills If you are a professional photographer, designer or social media marketer, you know that Photoshop is the tool for the job. It's the most powerful, versatile and well-maintained photo editor available today. So how would you use a less powerful image editor to edit photographs, and is it even possible?

Illustration for non-photographic products. The use of traditional photography and Photoshop would be prohibitively expensive for most freelance illustrators. This illustration by James Velasquez was created using Adobe's XD,

Students from the University of Kansas School of Law are trying to get the Kansas Legislature to pass a bill that would legalize physician-assisted suicide for terminally ill patients. The so-called Death with Dignity Act would allow doctors to administer lethal drugs to patients who request them. A companion bill is pending in the Kansas Senate. “I believe that it is wrong to take a life, and that it is wrong to bring a person to a point of being ready to take his or her own life,” said Harold McGlothan, a professor at the School of Law. “I believe that a life is a precious and a sacred thing and that we have a responsibility to make sure we preserve it, and we certainly have a right to do so.” McGlothan and his students organized the “Ending Life Not Ending Death” campaign, and they say five voters in Wichita have signed up to have their prescriptions filled under the proposed law. He hopes to gather the 10,000 signatures required by this past Friday. “We’re doing this because we believe that there are patients who would be very happy and very relieved to be able to access this method of dying,” McGlothan said. “Not that they won’t choose this method of dying, but just that it will be available to them as an option.” A University of Kansas poll from November 2013 showed that 69 percent of Kansans would support the Death with Dignity Act. A Washington Post poll from June of this year also found that seven out of 10 respondents favor the Death with Dignity Act. “So much of the debate right now is really on the format of the bill,” McGlothan said. “We’re really not arguing the merits of the issue. We’re saying, ‘Look, this is the state of Kansas, let’s come together and have a discussion about this and find a way to have a reasonable, thoughtful, compassionate solution to this issue that has been for so long such a divisive one.” The Death with Dignity Act would allow terminally ill patients to legally get prescriptions for lethal drugs. They would be given until their death to use them. “It provides a compassionate and secure way to die in a dignified way that is consistent with the concept of making the most of your time here on Dynamics of proton-proton cross sections above 1 TeV. The cross section of proton-proton elastic scattering on very-high-energy protons is measured up to energies of 3.5 times the pion production threshold at 1.48 TeV. The measurements are performed with the CALICE proton calorimeter for the first time. Taking into account corrections for the intrinsic beam energy spread as well as beam-velocity effects, the data are found to be in good agreement with the results from several previous experiments. The obtained cross section exhibits no indication of a significant rise at 5 times the pion production threshold, thereby eliminating the need for a steep rise of the cross section predicted in a recent model by the authors.
