Is it incorrect, or if it is correct, what is the description? A: There are a couple of things wrong here: vfarci.com is an affiliate network, you don't want that. It looks like you're using a CMS system, and are literally defining a page title by looping your data. That's going to make them not work properly. Also, there are questions here about how to return static JSON with django. Your best option would be to fix the last bit (by only pulling pages you want), then get your CMS to handle the (client-side) looping for you. Once you're building pages in your CMS, each page will also tell you exactly what is inside it (since you'll know what's inside it, and what data it needs), so you can do whatever you want in your templates (if you don't have your own CMS built, you can still do a bunch of CSS to make it look pretty, or you can use CSS to style what's inside a page). Also, as a side note, it's not very good practice to just pull every page's content into an array - an array is meant to hold data, not trees or lists. You should create a proper Pages model, where you store which pages you have, their contents (which might be just a string, not a tree), etc. If you are using Django, the documentation should show you how to do that.
