Players and teams are now subject to a new, expanded "injury" system, which utilizes data from player detection and proximity alerts. If a player takes a tackle too hard in a collision and sustains a minor injury, you'll be notified of this in-game. Players can also report specific injuries to the referee during play, which will enable the referee to take the appropriate action and alert the opposing team, if warranted. FIFA 20 also introduced TruePlayer Tactics, which allows players to choose between conventional, preferred, and true player movements. The AI will use this data to determine how it plays your player in the heat of the moment. FIFA is the world's game and the #1 title in football (soccer in North America). With over a billion players and 15 years on the market, it offers a wide variety of content, from single-player matches to multiplayer matches, to online features. Gameplay FIFA is the most authentic football simulation, bringing the sport to life in new ways. New additions to the engine include new injury systems, atmosphere, ball physics and the striking force of the player. Everything is designed to blend perfectly with its fully-licensed competition. Traditional players can now be quick and direct, with the ability to make darting runs, collect the ball on the ground, and use the ball on the counter-attack. New dribbling and creative skills give players the tools they need to break through the defence and find the final ball, and the 3D-rendered player models and animations bring the ball to life. New ball physics model a game-like pin-point accuracy to give players more control, while the new atmosphere system creates the right atmosphere for every match.
