Candy is also common in the ancient Egypt and Mesopotamian cultures in the form of sweets and pastries, and even more significant during the Roman era when it referred to thin, small confections (or douceurs) like jellies and sugar cakes.<sup>1</sup> The sweet is a sugary or honeyed dessert made from a combination of sucrose, glucose, fructose, and sometimes other sugars, sometimes with flavorings. Citrus juice is often a popular ingredient and it is derived from the compound ethyl acetate. Its literal meaning is "candy from the rock". In English, a candy is any confection made from a mixture of sugar, fat, and sweetener, in contrast to a sugar and  $\text{H}_2\text{O}$  ratio of 1:2 in baking.  $\text{H}_2\text{O}$  The term derives from the image of a compound made by dissolving sugar in water, separating it from the sugar crystals, and leaving a waxy mass, which in Latin is called candor (in English candy). Candy " A sweet food made of sugar, fats, and flavoring (e. From the Latin candor, which means "candor", "beauty" or "happiness". Candy corn is a cone-shaped confection, featuring a single kernel of corn instead of the usual six, and popular at Halloween. Candy is sweet and sticky in character; in the terminology of the candy industry, it is defined as "sweets with sugar content of 50–60 wt % or more". The major portion of candy, typically 85–90%, is sugar with a minor proportion of confectioners' sweeteners such as corn syrup, syrup, honey, and dextrose. The caloric content varies, depending on the sugar used, and the bulk of the United States candy is considered to be about 100 kcal per gram. Manufactured candy is not sold directly to consumers; the industry reaches people through stores that sell various types of confectionary. NOMENCLATURE of candy is difficult, and the terms candy, hard candy and confection are often used interchangeably. Both confection and candy are British terms (from Latin conficere, "to make, prepare"). The word candied has two meanings: it can refer to a sweet or a confection, such as fruitcake; or the product resulting from the use of sugar (e. In candy making
