* Layer Masks: This feature layers a green or white layer mask on top of an image, and it allows you to click and drag to fill the mask with the layer below, thus hiding the image and allowing you to create very selective edits. See Chapter 6 for more on layer masks and Photoshop's layer masks. * Gradients: With Photoshop's Gradient tool, you can choose the direction and intensity of color change for your layers as an alternative to using a background fill color. You can also fill portions of the layer with a gradient to create interesting effects, such as color and depth.

Gradients change the look of an image; see Chapter 9 for more on this important feature. * Layer Adjustments: Photoshop contains a collection of different tools for changing various properties of a layer, such as brightness, contrast, and color balance. These tools work hand in hand with the layer overlay system; see Chapter 6 for more about these important features. * Adjustment Layers: These layers have an effect on the layers below them. For example, they can be used to create a graduated filter effect, similar to the popular look in film photography. See Chapter 7 for more on this feature. * Camera Raw: While this feature is not directly related to Photoshop, it is worth knowing about. Camera Raw is a Photoshop plug-in that enables you to open RAW files in Photoshop and apply adjustments in a layered system. You can save your adjusted RAW files to other file formats as JPEGs, TIFFs, or PNGs. There are several other file formats you can save your files in for exporting them to other programs. Learn more about Camera Raw in Chapter 10. * Editing Layers: When you create an image in Photoshop, typically you create a new background and a layer beneath it. When you need to edit an image, you edit the image on top of this layer, not the layer beneath it. So, in Photoshop the layer beneath the editing layer is the "unedited" layer. To change the layer under which you work in Photoshop, choose Layer⇒New Layer to create a new layer, or press the Alt (Windows) or Option (Mac) key and click the New Layer icon at the bottom of the Layers palette to create a new layer. Understanding the Edit Batch System If you're an experienced user of Photoshop, you may use the Edit Batch system all the time. If you're just starting out, you may not

Q: Qt5 QGraphicsScene mouse event not handled I created a QGraphicsScene which has an ImageViewer at the top to display an image. I want to be able to click on the image and it hides it while opening a new window with a larger image, but I can't seem to get the mouse event to register. Here is my code: `void QGraphicsView::mouseMoveEvent(QMouseEvent *event) { if(event->buttons() & Qt::LeftButton) { if(QGraphicsScene::contains(event->pos())) { mouse_image_viewer->hide(); } } }` The event isn't even firing at all. What am I doing wrong? Is it because my image view has no graphics context? A: The QGraphicsView has a default cursor of Qt::PointingHandCursor. Changing it to Qt::SizeAllCursor in the constructor (or in the QGraphicsView's mouseMoveEvent handler) should solve it. Q: Python ctypes construct by reference with global array I am trying to build ctypes object with the reference of an existing array. I am trying to build a class that supports a given sub-array of an array of bits with the properties that it is incrementable and decrementable. I started by copying the create_array_ctypes function from the examples for ctypes.array The Issue is that I pass an array to the constructor and create_array_ctypes builds the class to point to a different array than was passed in. I can find no obvious reason for this issue. Can anyone spot the issue with the below code? `import ctypes ret_pix = POINTER( ctypes.c_ubyte ) if ctypes.sizeof( ctypes.c_ubyte ) == 4: ret_pix_typesize = ctypes.c_uint32 elif ctypes.sizeof( ctypes.c_ubyte ) == 2`
