A new model for neurogenesis in Drosophila, the oenocytes (also known as the spinacula), shows that neural stem cells with a simple competence order generate one or more neuron types in the larval brain. The oenocytes are small cells embedded in the visceral nerve ring that also transduce mechanical stimuli. The oenocytes are a rich source of neural stem cells and a source of neurons that can be monitored in vivo. A multipotent competence order does not imply a linear list of neuronal types. Instead, it implies a variety of neural stem cells, each with a different competence order that specifies types in their production. The oenocytes provide evidence that the order of competence is one aspect of the genetic program. is $22 + d$? 23 Suppose $0 = -4*l + 16*l - 7632$.
