The city houses and buildings are mostly Italianate, and the worst examples of eclectic style are present: the Spanish style, which is the worst used in the region. One example is Palazzo Baldassini, the seat of a Neapolitan duke, which is said to date from the 16th century and is in a Greek-Roman palazzo style.

Some of the best examples of Baroque architecture are found in the Old Port of Genoa, with its impressive interiors and facades. The Roman classics are also intact in the city centre, especially in the Roman forums of Porta Soprana (northwest of the port) and Porta Soprana (southwest) in the late roman city: as Porta Soprana was one of the main gates of the Roman walls, it was a military port. The very obvious ancient architecture was used to build the church of St. Anthony of Padua (called "Monte"), just outside the walls, and partially the church of Monastero di Santa Maria Maggiore, located at the intersection of the Via Giuseppe Verdi and Via Porta Soprana. The Basilica of Santa Maria Assunta was built in the first half of the 13th century in the Arab style, as were many others; the baptistery and Santa Maria di Loreto, located in the old centre, were built in the 12th century and modified in the early 20th century. Finally, the bell tower is the only one of its kind. The concentration of ruins of imperial Roman city in the old centre is unexpected; however, in one of the main squares of the heart of the city, the Teatro Romano or Theatre of Olimpia, was built between the 1st and 3rd centuries, and then later used as a hippodrome. The Ponte di Mezzo, a typical characteristic in the city, is a 15th-century suspension bridge (one of the oldest in Italy and one of the longest), located on the river Arno; it has the shape of an arch and is used for the movements of the public water and is a good landmark in the city. The other main feature of the city is the Palazzo dei Congress
