Of all those who died battling to liberate the country, it was the women of Libya who were the true heroes and heroines of the revolution. On Tuesday, one of the United Nations (UN) special ambassadors, Vian Dagher, will give the keynote address at the 13th International Women of Courage Forum, taking place on a campus at the University of Dublin. Ms Dagher will speak at the forum about "women and peaceful movements" and how women are increasingly taking to the streets in peaceful actions which affect international peace and security. She will also discuss the way in which the UN system, in particular, and international civil society, support women leaders in the region and the challenges they face. Ms Dagher, who was a teacher in Libya and was a founder of the National Association of Women Teachers in Libya, fled the regime in 1969. She then moved to France where she studied on a scholarship to continue her studies. She says that while in France, she was exposed to discussions about inequality and discrimination against women in the workplace. She says that she was particularly inspired by the "matriarchal" values and practices of the Berber people who were in her part of France. And then she, as well as her mother, saw the hope of a better life for her in Libya. "I started to feel that my future, my life, was in Libya. I felt that I had a responsibility for the life of my country and that I would be educated in my country and would teach the people there how to live." While many travelled to Europe, and many of those who came to Ireland got to know the country, others were not as lucky, Ms Dagher says. "I had a number of friends who were raped, abused, sexually exploited, who were taken to Saudi Arabia and forced into marriages. "I knew a large number of children who had been killed and I was extremely conscious of the fact that the dehumanisation of women in Libya was happening, and of the fact that it was happening in my own society. "I realised that if I remained in France I would be a part of this process." She says the exposure that she had in France and her responsibilities for the Libyan future led her to the establishment of a Libyan Women's Movement in 1969. The organisation, Women's Revolutionary Organization, was founded following the overthrow of the regime of Muammar Gaddafi, who had

Linear phase-spectral optical coherence tomography and phase-shift demodulation. We report a linear phase-spectral optical coherence tomography (OCT) technique that uses high-resolution phase spectrometer which enables us to convert an interferogram to the intensity spectrum. In OCT imaging, a linear phase-shift demodulation technique that extracts the correlation between the reference arm and the sample arm of a Michelson interferometer has been proposed, and, by combining the technique with a linear phase-spectral demodulation technique, we have developed phase-spectral OCT. In addition, it has been experimentally demonstrated that, by using both the linear phase-spectral and linear phase-shift demodulation techniques together, three-dimensional (3-D) OCT images can be reconstructed without the need for any Fourier transform algorithms or any phase unwrapping.

Q: How to add a row to a matrix with zero elements Using Python, I want to add a row to a matrix that is a 0-1 matrix of unsigned integers. How do I do this? I have tried: `row1 = np.zeros((number_of_rows, number_of_columns))` However, that doesn't add a row of zeros. I tried: `row1[number_of_rows] = 0` But that doesn't work either. Any ideas? A: Use NumPy's inplace methods
