serum 17-hydroxyprogesterone and androstenedione concentrations which were related to hydrocortisone dose. The increases were more pronounced in males than in females, and the effects were more marked in immature than in young adults. Serum testosterone and LH concentrations decreased significantly only in males and were inversely related to the hydrocortisone dose. Histologically, testicular lesions increased with hydrocortisone dose. In males, these effects were predominantly observed in Leydig cells, while in females Leydig cells were intact. The changes in testosterone and gonadotrophin concentrations and in testicular morphology induced by hydrocortisone are similar to those observed following administration of hydrocortisone to immature female rats.
