is a primary imaging tool that has been shown to increase early detection of breast cancer. We have recently demonstrated that breast MRI detects abnormal lesions less often than mammography alone, particularly when the lesion is a small non-mass-like lesion \[[@B1]\]. In that study we used the term "Breast MRI" without any distinction between localizing and localizing/diagnostic breast MRI. Our findings were limited to women who had a screening MRI following negative mammography findings.
Purpose of this study was to determine the rate of positive pathology among subsequent biopsy following negative
