stipulation in Japanese Utility Model Publication No. Hei 4-72627. This stipulation discloses the difficulty of insertion of a paper document into a device (information which permits insertion of a paper document thereinto. This difficulty can be more actual in the case of a small-sized information processing terminal which is loaded with a small memory but permits insertion of a paper document because the available memory is insufficient in capacity to store an image of the paper document to be inserted therein. Furthermore, this stipulation discloses the use of an interface which is manipulated by a pen in addition to a keyboard. However, according to this stipulation, the design and the handling of a

Invention The present invention relates generally to a system and method for monitoring a person. More specifically, the invention relates to a child monitoring and locating system and method. 2. Related Art Existing child monitoring systems are known in the art. Such known systems determine the general physical location of the child. If the general location is deemed unsafe, an alert may be generated and sent to emergency personnel or the caregiver may be alerted. One disadvantage of such systems is that they only provide an alert if the child is deemed to be in an unsafe location. The caregiver is then left to search for the child until, hopefully, the child has moved. Another disadvantage is that such systems do not provide any means for tracking the location of the child during this process. Accordingly, it is desirable to provide a child monitoring and tracking system and method that overcomes these and other disadvantages of prior art systems and methods. Intraventricular immunization with herpesvirus saimiri glycoprotein D adjuvanted with an anti-idiotypic monoclonal antibody elicits neutralizing antibodies in macaques.

Herpesvirus saimiri (HVS) is a non-cytopathic human gamma-herpesvirus. After primary infection or reactivation of the virus, HVS establishes a lifelong latent infection in neural cells. HVS-encoded glycoprotein D (gD) is a major immunogen of HVS and an attractive vaccine target. However, clinical application of HVS has been hampered by concerns about safety and genetic transformation in the developing brain. We show here that an intraventricular delivery of live attenuated HVS results in the high-level expression of gD in brain and elicits an anti-gD antibody response in all of the macaques. Anti-gD antibodies are capable of neutralizing HVS infection in vitro. These data represent, to our knowledge, the first demonstration of the delivery of live virus to the central nervous system using stereotactic approach for vaccination. Effects of peak motor unit size on the mechanical response of muscles. The purpose of the present study
