An adjustable image. A transparency layer, or layer, lets you manipulate multiple images at once. When you use Photoshop, you interact with image layers: Each layer is an independent document. You can add, delete, or move layers. Each layer has its own background color and its own foreground color. You can move one layer down or under other layers, and you can always move one layer up or above other layers. In this article, you discover how you can apply Photoshop Layers in a new and innovative way. To be able to duplicate one layer by another, you might need to set a certain value. To make sure that all changes are exact, you can lock a layer. A Layers dialog box. A layer is a special type of layer, which makes it possible to add new layers. You can switch among the layers by clicking on the layers list box or pressing the Tab key. Creating a New Layer When you press Ctrl+Shift+N, you get a new empty layer. (If you don't press Ctrl, the new layer is added to the current active layer. Pressing Ctrl+N always creates a new empty layer.) The new layer is in the top layer (position 0) and therefore the active layer (position 1). Moving a Layer Moving a layer makes a copy of that layer. You can move layers up or down using the Layer menu. To move one layer to the position immediately below the active layer, press Ctrl+J, or move to the position below the active layer by dragging it down. To move a layer to the position immediately above the active layer, press Ctrl+K. To move a layer that is already below the active layer, hold down the Alt (Windows) or Option (Mac) key and press the left-arrow (←) or right-arrow (→) key to move a layer up or down (see Figure 1). Figure 1: Move a layer up or down. A layer's position in the layers list box affects the editing area's foreground and background colors. When the layers are in the correct position, the active layer's text and background color will be the active layer's foreground color and the other layers' background color. You can duplicate a layer by pressing Ctrl+J, Ctrl+C (Mac), or ⌘+J (Windows). In this case, two layers are created. Because one is immediately below the active layer and

In less than two hours, Texans in an Islamic neighborhood in Houston turned out to keep watch. They were looking for a suspect police described as “armed and dangerous.” Police had found the man after a 9-1-1 call about a man with a gun. As early as 6:30 a.m., the man, who did not identify himself, was spotted just before 8 a.m. by two plainclothes police officers. “He was wearing a pink polo shirt and had a small handgun,” Houston police said on Twitter. After police observed him moving from one building to another, they saw he had a cellphone. “He was holding the phone up to his head with one hand, and trying to hide the handgun with the other hand,” police said.

Effect of prior experience of the dog on the development of fear and, conversely, the development of conditioning to novel stimulus. Rats, like humans, show a higher reactivity to fear relevant stimuli in their immediate environment. This is called neophobia. In the previous experiments, we found that rats given a simultaneous discrimination trial (experienced/novel learning) showed a more marked reduction in neophobia than rats given a delayed discrimination trial (exposed/novel learning). In this study, we compared the effects of the experimental conditions of these two experiments on the development of fear and, conversely, on the development of the conditioned response (CR) to a novel stimulus. In Experiment 1, 48 four-week-old rats were randomly divided into two groups: one was given a simultaneous trial discrimination (Ex3/Cg) while the other was given a delayed trial discrimination (Ex3/Ex4) 30 days later. Ex3, Ex4, Cg, and g were a novel environment, a familiar environment, a novel context and a familiar context, respectively. Then, reactivity was assessed by the observation of fear reactions immediately after the training, and the development of the CR to the novel stimuli was assessed 30 days later. In Experiment 2, a random sample of 32 four-week-old rats was divided into four groups (2x2): 1) Ex3/Cg, 2) Ex3/Ex4, 3) Cg/Ex4, and 4) Cg/Ex3. The other 32 rats were tested again 30 days later. Ex3, Ex4, Cg, and g were a familiar environment

Q: Variable is not set, when calling an ArrayList I am trying to simulate my own eraser. It is working quite fine. However I noticed that when I set an ArrayList a = new ArrayList();, the list is empty. However, when I'm trying to set a String a = "", it is working fine. I am not sure why this is happening.

import java.util.ArrayList; public class Eraser { public static void main(String[] args) { ArrayList a = new ArrayList(); for (int i = 0; i < args.length; i++) { a.add(args[i]); } System.out.println(a); } }
